

Situation	What?	How?	Why?	Who?
1	A student is waiting in line to park at the university parking lot.	The student looks frustrated, checking their phone repeatedly; they sigh often and tap their foot impatiently.	The parking lot is full, and they are unsure how long they will have to wait. They are likely in a rush to attend a class or an important meeting.	A young university student wearing a backpack, appearing stressed and late for their schedule.
2	A driver is arguing with a parking attendant at a busy public parking lot.	The driver looks angry, gesturing with their hands, while the parking attendant is trying to explain something calmly.	The parking lot is full or the driver disagrees with the parking fee, causing frustration and a heated exchange.	A middle-aged driver wearing formal clothes, possibly commuting to work, and a calm parking lot attendant.
3	A delivery worker is struggling to find a parking space near an apartment complex.	The worker is circling the block repeatedly, looking at the parked cars and occasionally stopping to check potential spaces.	The limited parking options near the complex make it hard for them to park temporarily, delaying their delivery.	A delivery worker in a branded vehicle, looking stressed and rushed while navigating the tight parking area.
4	A parent is trying to park in a crowded school parking lot during pick-up time.	The parent looks overwhelmed, repeatedly checking the rearview mirror and looking for open spaces, while children are crossing the lot.	The parking lot is chaotic during peak hours, and the parent is struggling to find a safe and convenient spot to pick up their child without causing a delay.	A parent in a mid-sized car, appearing tired and worried, surrounded by other cars and children crossing.
